The landscape has shifted in the previous decade, from an industry dominated by high-street brands to one where customers increasingly book holidays and trips from home. Online power-players continue to utilise the latest technology to make the experience of booking across multiple airlines and hotels a streamlined, easy process. Searches can be made on a range of criteria, including hotel star rating, cost and travel time. Overheads for these companies are also cheaper, which means the overall package price is often lower than high-street agents.

While this is a reality that all street travel agents must face. Like many industries, the continual shift to online purchasing has impacted most heavily on mainstream travel agents, those that aim to provide a service to all parts of the market.

Many have gone into the necessity of radically altering their business model, becoming an Online Travel Agency.
